They decided to go out to a restaurant in a city that is 30 minutes away from Emma.

When she got there all of her friends were waiting for her and they all greeted each other

Then they looked at the menu for 5-10 minutes before ordering

Emma didn't order that much, while the others order a little to much.

After they all finished eating, her friends still had food left so they decided to pay for dinner and take the leftovers home.

While they were deciding how to pay, Emma paid for the meal and her friends promised to pay her back on how much they ate that day.

Emma then uses the BillSpilter app to calculate how much they each owe her for the meal.

After dinner, they decided to go walk downtown and after their walk, they all said goodbye and go home.

When Emma gets home she sends her friends the amount they spent at dinner using the BillSpilter app so they know how much to pay her back

On the weekends Jake enjoys to go out to the bar with his friends, however, they tend to spend a lot of money. This is hard for Jake because he's trying to save his money to move, additionally, he's also short on money because of his job as an Uber driver.

Because they forget how much each person spent, Jake and his friends argue about how much they pay. Jake gets very upset because he's short on money and doesn't want to pay more than what he got.

After a long night out, Jake scrolls through his instagram and finds an App called Bill Splitter, an App that is designed to split the bill between each person evenly and quickly.
